

Gaa'el

Written by Serenity

Tuesday, 08 January 2008 01:55 - Last Updated Tuesday, 08 January 2008 20:01

This is indeed an intriguing race. With an origin shrouded in mystery, there are not many who know where these creatures have come from. Aside from being smaller in stature, with little to no hair, they are very human in appearance.

More than once has this caused an unfortunate opponent to underestimate their abilities and power. Unlike the human race, the Gaa'el are a race based on immense mental power. They are able to tap into regions of the mind and psyche that other races don't even know exist.

Through this incredible mental power, they have found ways to focus their mind beyond the pain of searing fire and above the mystic realm of magics. As the Gaa'el grow in size and age, their mind naturally assists them in ignoring damage from the physical realm as well.

Through intense study, the Gaa'el have learned a way to inflict severe damage physically as well, by concentrating heavily on their own hands and thrusting forward at an opponent with a quiver type attack. It is also rumored that as the willpower of the Gaa'el increases, they are able to mask themselves to the eyes of the world, gaining the power of invisibility. To these people, there are three stages to their life span: the learning stage known as the Gaa'el, the stage of repent known as the Dayenar, and the final ascension to the highest plane of knowledge, known as the Koj'ehr stage.